Update on Secretary of State Building Operations during COVID-19 Pandemic

SACRAMENTO, CA – Following directives from Governor Gavin Newsom and public health officials, the Secretary of State’s office is moving as many staff as feasible to telework. The Secretary of State’s offices in both Sacramento and Los Angeles will remain open, and critical functions and services provided by the Secretary of State will continue.

Members of the public are encouraged to use the Secretary of State’s online services or contact staff by email or phone for assistance. Public counters at offices will remain open, but with limited staff.

“The mission critical functions and services of the Secretary of State will continue during this pandemic and they must be done in a manner which is safe both for staff and for the public we serve,” Secretary of State Alex Padilla said. “Over the past few years, many of the Secretary of State’s services have become available online. I urge anyone who needs to do business with the Secretary of State to check our online offerings first before visiting our offices in Sacramento or Los Angeles in person. Many business filing tools and documents; voter registration, registration updates, and status look-ups; campaign finance filings; and archival documents are available online or by contacting agency staff by email or by phone. Doing business online during this pandemic will keep things running as smoothly as possible while protecting everyone’s health and safety. I thank all Secretary of State staff for their service and professionalism, and I thank the public for their patience and understanding during this public health emergency. We will get through this together.”
